This week: Mobility and greener transport

As we work to encourage increased walking and biking in our community, we might consider how some other cities are approaching those same issues.

--The PeopleforBikes organization says that, nationwide, there are more outstanding bike lanes - examples of how to provide opportunities for safer and easier travel on two wheels - this year than last, and they offer their list of the ten best - including one in Tennessee.

--AARP addresses an issue that's becoming more common as a significant portion of our population ages with a slideshow on dangerously incomplete streets - places where it's not as safe as it should be for seniors, or anyone, to walk.

--And CNN cites increasing transit ridership as one of "5 signs America is falling in love with public transit."
