Sgt. York

Stratton Ave. was home to the family of World War I hero Sergeant Alvin York. Sgt. York was awarded the Medal of Honor when, drastically outnumbered and outgunned, he led a just a handful of men in taking over a German machine gun nest, resulting in the deaths of 28 German soldiers and the capture of 132 others. Today, his statue still stands outside the Tennessee State Capitol.

East Branch Library

The East Branch Library is one of just two remaining public libraries in Nashville that were originally funded by Andrew Carnegie. Today, it is a fully functioning library, including amenities such as public Internet access and a meeting room that can be reserved. Check the Nashville Public Library website at www.library.nashville.org for up-to-date hours, as well as scheduling information for special programs, events, and children's story hours.
