Culture and Placemaking

Community Conversation

What's Inside

On July 10, 2014, Nashvillians gathered to discuss culture: what it means, and how to enhance it. Nashvillians examined ways to enhance culture through creative placemaking - public and private partners shaping the physical and social character of a neighborhood or city through the arts. Their many comments are summarized in this report. Also included is the presentation given by Craig Hoover of the company LiveWorkLearnPlay and member of the Arts, Culture and Creativity Resource Team - community leaders and experts guiding the creation of goals, policies and action steps in this topic area.

Why this conversation now?

On July 10, 2014, NashvilleNext hosted a Community Conversation on Culture & Placemaking. More than 70 Nashvillians attended and discussed how to improve Nashville's rural, suburban, and urban places to respect their unique qualities and retain their character and culture. Craig Hoover of LiveWorkPlay, introduced participants to placemaking ideas and tools. Every comment from the conversation is tagged by the type of activity and community in which the activity takes place (rural, suburban, or urban). Other tags identify common ideas.

There are multiple reasons why this was an important community conversation to have now.

First, over the next 25 years, Nashville is trending to have no majority minority; the community will be more diverse. It is important to understand how people are creating and participating in culture now and in the future.

Secondly, Nashville has received external acclaim due to its modern and international flair, driven mostly by the country music industry. This conversation was an opportunity for Nashvillians to better define what makes Nashville great across its many diverse communities and cultures beyond what Nashville is generally known for.

Finally, Nashville/Davidson County includes downtown, urban, suburban, and rural centers and neighborhoods. Each have distinct cultures and opportunities for improving livability and quality of place. This Community Conversation revealed relevant creative placemaking strategies to enhance those activities. These ideas will help refine the NashvilleNext goals and policies, and will create a starting point for the Metro Nashville Arts Commission's forthcoming strategic plan.

The Community Conversation

The purpose of this community conversation was to get a better understanding of where culture was happening within in the county and how it could be enhanced.

The conversation began by establishing a common definition of culture. Culture was defined as the creation and expression of a shared identity. Defining culture was important because up to this point, the idea of culture was confined to artistic venues in Downtown Nashville, or a collective idea of the type of community Nashville had become (e.g. friendly culture, country music, We Are Nashville - the city's rally cry after the 2010 flood). The NashvilleNext Arts, Culture and Creativity Resource Team knew however, that culture was more nuanced than that. Culture happens all over the county - in rural, suburban and urban environments amongst Nashvillians from every walk of life. Therefore, to build on the definition of culture, the community was asked to explain where cultural activities were occurring county wide and how they were participating in them.

The second part of the conversation centered around how creative placemaking could help enhance culture happening in rural, suburban and urban places. Creative Placemaking is defined as public and private partners shaping the physical and social character of a neighborhood or city through the arts. Shaping the physical aspect of a community to enhance culture relates to the built environment (i.e. housing, transportation, work space for artists). The social character of a neighborhood relates to cultivating and supporting artists and creatives.

There are three ways to shape either the physical or social character of a neighborhood, with the goal of enhancing culture; which can be used singularly or in some combination.

1. Improve access and participation;
2. Build, attract and retain artistic talent; or
3. Creative Placemaking to spur economic development.

Participants were asked to assign each of these methods to the activities they identified in the first part of the discussion.

Discussion Part 1
How do you participate in culture?

Discussion Part 2
What could help enhance access to the culture happening in our communities?

Examples of Cultural Activities

Urban

Blackbird Theater, a professional non-profit theater company founded by Wes Driver and Greg Greene, artists-in-residence for the Lipscomb University Department of Theatre, is a prime example of theater performance in urban areas. Nashvillians noted better transportation access as an enhancement strategy for theaters and performances in urban areas.

Rural & Suburban

Peeler Park (in rural parts of Madison in Northeast Davidson County) and Mill Creek Greenway (in suburban parts of Southeast Davidson County) are examples of rural and suburban outdoor recreational activities that could benefit from better access. Comments noted that better access should include alternatives to driving.

Location and time will be announced. Please leave your email at sign-in for updates.

Table Discussion Guide

Discussion Part 1

1. Take a few moments to write down at least two ways that you participate in culture in Nashville. Remember it can run the gamut!
2. After everyone has written down at least two ideas, take turns to introduce yourself. Tell us:
  - a. Your Name
  - b. What brought you here tonight, or What you're most excited about
  - c. Your two cultural activities
3. Based on where the activity takes place, place your post-it note under the rural, suburban, or urban column. E.g. you attend the Frist Museum; place that activity under the "urban" column. Love an ethnic restaurant in Antioch; place that under the "suburban" column.
4. Don't put anything in the "Enhance It" row. We'll get there in a moment!
5. After everyone has gone around the table once, continue to place your other post-it notes and ideas down on the chart. Keep going with your discussion until the host calls time.

Discussion Part 2

1. You've heard the tools. Now let's start enhancing access to your activities!
2. On the post-it notes, write down the tool that would help enhance access to that cultural activity. Place it in the Enhance It row. Please use these short hand notations you for the ideas discussed:

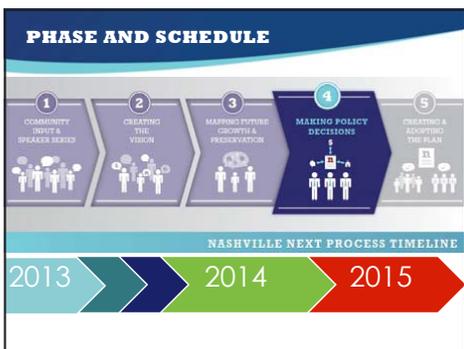

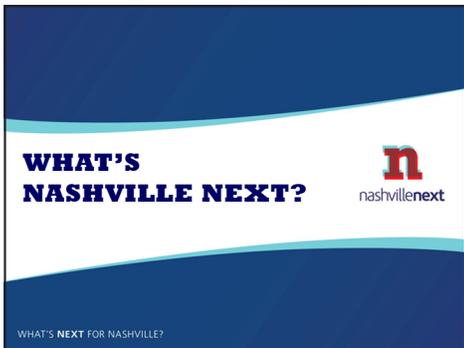

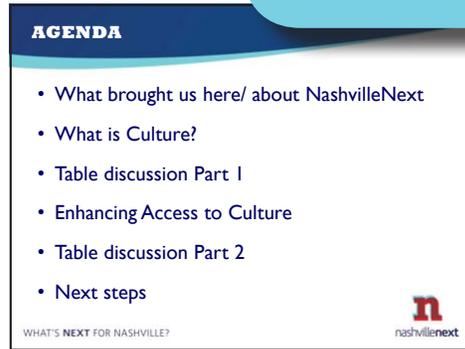

#1	#2	#3
Improve access and participation	Attract and retain creative talent	Creative Placemaking to spur Economic Development

3. See how many activities you can enhance with the ideas mentioned above.
4. REPORT OUT: Your table may be selected to report out. Pick ONE ACTIVITY and the ONE TOOL identified to enhance it, to report to the group.

Culture and Placemaking Community Conversation

Presentation - Craig Hoover of LiveWorkPlay and Tifnie Capehart of NashvilleNext and the Metro Nashville Planning Department, delivered the presentation to frame the issue at the Culture and Placemaking Community Conversation.

The presentation began with updates on the NashvilleNext process.

Presentation

The Culture and Placemaking conversation was driven by the need to better define culture as the community grows to be more diverse over the next 25 years.

WHAT NASHVILLE THINKS ABOUT CULTURE...

"A better public transit system could connect people and further integrate different cultures."

"(Love) the diversity of people that creates a span of cultures, food, languages and ideas."

"(Love) the diversity of culture, people, the arts and friendliness..."

"(Nashville is) a city that becomes more walkable. It has more culture venues inside of the city center..."

Summary of Comments

A few notes about the Summary of Comments:

During the table discussions, participants were asked to discuss how they participate in culture (activity), where (type of place and community - rural, suburban, urban) and how to enhance those activities. The comments are organized by:

- Type of place (e.g. Rural, Suburban, Urban) and community name if provided (e.g. Whites Creek)
- Type of activity
- How to enhance the activity, and the enhancement strategy is identified by number:
  1. Improve access and participation
  2. Build, attract and retain artistic talent
  3. Creative Placemaking to spur Economic Development
  4. Apply all of the above

The summary of comments are provided on the following pages.
